The 4 core fiber optic cable price list reflects not only raw materials but also manufacturing stan.

Key Takeaways

You can purchase 4-core optical fiber cables from specialized suppliers, online marketplaces, or directly from manufacturers, choosing based on type, installation environment, and certification requirements. Types of 4-Core Fiber Optic Cables
Single-Mode (SM) vs. Multimode (MM)
Single-mode (OS2, G.

652, G. 657A1/A2): Ideal for long-distance transmission up to 100 km, commonly used in FTTH, GPON, and telecom backbones. Multimode (OM3, OM4): Suitable for shorter distances within buildings or campuses, supporting high-speed LANs and data centers.

Indoor vs.

Outdoor

Indoor cables: LSZH jackets, flexible, water-resistant, suitable for building installations. Outdoor cables: Armored, UV-resistant, direct burial or aerial, designed for harsh environments.

Special Features

Armored cables: Steel or aluminum armor for mechanical protection. Eco-friendly options: Halogen-free, flame-retardant jackets for safety in confined spaces. Customizable: Color-coded jackets, hybrid fiber-copper designs, or specific lengths.

Key Considerations Before Purchase

Cable Type & Fiber Mode: Match single-mode or multimode to your network distance and speed requirements. Installation Environment: Choose indoor, outdoor, armored, or direct burial based on deployment conditions. Certifications & Testing: Ensure compliance with ISO/IEC, TIA/EIA, or GR-326 standards for reliability and low attenuation.

Length & Customization: Determine required lengths and consider custom labeling or color coding for easier maintenance. Budget & Total Cost of Ownership: Factor in durability, warranty, and potential maintenance costs; cheaper cables may degrade faster. Supplier Support: Prefer suppliers offering technical support, documentation, and shipping options suitable for your location.

Steps to Purchase

Identify your network requirements (distance, speed, indoor/outdoor). Select the fiber type (single-mode or multimode) and cable features (armored, LSZH, direct burial). Compare suppliers for price, certifications, and delivery options.

Request quotes or samples if needed, especially for large-scale or custom deployments. Place the order online or through a distributor, ensuring proper shipping and documentation. By following these steps and choosing reputable suppliers like OWIRE, Jera Line, or Amphenol Custom Cable, you can ensure high-quality, reliable 4-core optical fiber cables suitable for your network infrastructure.
